Not long ago, Comstock, 46, was a marketing manager at General Electric; we have to thank her for the ecomagination. She moved into THE GE division of NBC Universal 18 months ago and has just received a new gig that combines sales of advertising and digital media across the television network, cable channels and film studios. Want to stream Heroes, read an interactive novel and then bet online for works of art from the show? Thanks to Comstock for all that too. The economics of television were simple. Do you understand how to make money today when I can watch 30 Rock pretty much anytime? We understand this much better than before. Digital media allows us to open new windows without the cannibalization you might expect. So yes, we can offer 30 Rock in preview, then on the air, then streaming, then iTunes, then mobile, and then syndication. We did the simulation. Looks like we're making more money. How do advertisers cope with this new world? Some know what they want, some to a lesser extent. But now, every marketer does digital, not because it's fashionable, but because they should. Buying groups have created units called sight, sound and motion (to work through the media). They expect us to zero in on targeted consumers: What do we know about them and how do we achieve them? How do viewing habits change? We had 60 million streams (television shows) in NBC.com. Many of them are repeat viewers. Others change time. They are shift locations, too, with iTunes or on phones. And does that work for you? He has to. If consumers are in control, they understand how they want to look. We have to find the right solution. What happens next? More personal expression (viewers), a desire to participate in the narrative. For example, SMS text to vote in a reality show, or watch Heroes and dial a phone number. This material is so rudimentary; One day we'll look back and say, We were so nice then! All this implies huge cultural changes. How does NBC Universal handle it? This space is frantic and chaotic, and we are constantly trying to get out of our own way. With success, you will get a little more confident. But we still need to be more focused and more disciplined. Are you still, as you once said about yourself, impatient? Yes. And I'm afraid. I scan the landscape all the time. What happens next? Who's going to get there first? This business is so hypersensitive. You have to choose the path, keep it, and feel good about it. The second guess ends up with more than an ulcer. Image: The official page of the United States Navy MC2 Gary Granger Jr./U.S. Navy For centuries, United States Navy sailors plied world waters, defending America's interests and projecting the country's military might. As they shoot down through the waves, they bandy about colorful terms, phrases and handles that only sailors really know. In this barnacle-laden test, do you think you can kick through these navy conditions... or will you close three sheets to the wind? Sailors work disciplinedly disciplined to service and operate their ships. In peacetime, they use words such as quarter, cheat and aback as part of their lexicon. Some terms, such as adrift, are quite understandable. Others, like avast, will be pretty vague for those who haven't been in the service (avast means to stop your current actions immediately). And of course, the life of the navy is full of adult themed language, but we need to keep racy material for another quiz. You mean, where did the phrase know the rope come from? This is an old sailor talking to understand your way around the ship. Boats is an abbreviation from a fellow boatwain, and chips an old slang term for a ship carpenter. Can you name other terms used to describe parts of ships and men and women that float them around the world? Go full speed ahead in this navy term quiz now! We'll find out if you're old salt, or if you're a ricky who needs to go back to your smear station. What do you know about dinosaurs? What is an octane rating? And how do you use a proper noun? They also offer standard transcription services for about 2 cents per word. Most transcription services bill by the hour, so it seems quite a lot - especially with turnover times ranging from 24 minutes to 24 hours. Have FC Now readers used the service? He stood there for a few minutes, not knowing what he should do. He eventually took a seat on a paint-splattered chair next to the table where he had been imprisoned so recently. He ran with his fingertips through the teeth of a sawn-off blade. Looking down, he noticed a neat red sphere. He was lying on the floor next to his left foot. He took it. Glossy marble made of scarlet plastic, cool and slightly inferior. One of the restraints, both him and Skinner. He sat there watching the skinner and listening to the bridge moan during the storm, strange music coming out of the bundle of cables. He wanted TC to push his ear against them, but some feared that he couldn't call him away from him. Skinner woke up once, or seemed to be struggling to sit down, calling, Yamazaki thought, for the girl. « There's no one here, Yamazaki said, on Skinner's shoulder. Don't you remember? I swear to God, Nigel said, 'this shit just moved.' The back of the ceramic knife is pressed on her wrist; was the sound of how the inner tube let go when you patch it too many times and then that wrist was free. That's bullshit. Jesus! His hands are rough and fast, Chevette's eyes opening on the second pop, the red spot whanging back and forth around the stacked scrap. Nigel's head followed it as a counterweight to the head of a plaster dog that Skinner found once and sent it for sale. Each wall in this narrow space, filled with metal, debited sections of Reynolds' old pipes, dusty jam jars stuffed with rusty spokes. Nigel's workshop, where he built his trolleys, did what shadetree fixes he could on any bike came his way. The salmon-fork that dangled from his left ear ticked into the counterpoint to his turn-based head and then jingled as he grabbed the thing in the middle of the bounce. A ball of red plastic. Where can I buy a modlerite? Man, he said, impressed, who put this on you? Chevette got up and trembled, this tremor running down through her like a living affair as these red bracelets moved. How she felt now, it was just the way she felt that day she would return to the trailer and found her mother all packed and gone. No message there hut can ravioli in a pot on the stove, with a can opener propped up next to it. She didn't eat that ravioli, and she hasn't eaten since, and she knew she never would. But that feeling came, that day, and absorbed everything inside it, so great that you couldn't prove that he was there, except for the arithmetic of absence and memory of the best days. And she moves in it, whatever it is, from one point to another, until she got behind that wire in Beaverton, in a place so bad that it was like a piece of broken glass to rub into that big empty. And thus increasingly aware of what has consumed the world, although it was only seen if you ever work in an administrative position, it may be your job to decipher the minutes. It may be harder than you think to decipher the minutes. Transcribing minutes means striking the right balance between playing too little and too many notes that you took at your meeting. In addition, you should show not only sharp listening skills, but also good editorial sensitivity. Following the guide below, you can make a professional transcription of minutes. Transcript as soon as you can after your meeting. You can easily remember what happened in the meeting. It is right to give right to your minutes of the document. Record meeting attendees, meeting goals (s) and meeting dates/duration. You should also include a key that lists the initials of the participants along with their full names, because every time a participant speaks, you can foreword their statement with their initials. To transcribe the meeting in chronological order. Divide on the topic, if there were several topics discussed at the meeting. For example, if the discussion has changed from budget resources, the foreword to the next conversation is as follows: Discussion than changed to the personnel considerations of the department ... The difference between important and unimportant discussions in your meeting. For example, you certainly don't want to decipher the moments that someone went off topic and talked about personal matters. Instead of noting that discussion veered off course, write either ellipses... or something like: After about an hour of unrelated conversation... Save the document on your hard drive (or flash drive) before you print it out. Minute transcription records most of the core business decisions, so it's important that these solutions are saved for future references. Tips Always check spelling and grammar before submitting your transcription minutes to your boss. Ask your boss if there's a template that you can use to decrypt protocols. If not, ask if there are previous minutes of transcription you can refer to when writing your own. Warnings Be extremely careful when recording any flashes in a meeting. Not to mention the man behind the explosion, but mention something like: It was strongly encouraged by that. If you are ever unsure whether to claim a name in disgust, consult with the chairman of the meeting.
